He will be told: With your child seeking forgiveness for youà (Ibn Majah) Rasullah ØµÜYes Ø$UUUU Ø1UUU¶¶¶ Ø1UUU¶¶ U¶¶¶ He is quoted in a sermon he delivered during the days of Hajj: àèèø People! Surely your Rabb is one, your father is one. An Arab does not have virtue over a Non-Arab, nor does a Non-Arab have virtue over an Arab, a skinny red person is not more virtuous than a dark person, and is not a dark person more virtuous than a skinny red person, except through Taqwa". (Musnad Ahmad, vol. 5 pg. 411) If I ever think of something, I usually ignore it. If something comes up twice, uh... a very likely coincidence. Three times can be a short-term trend. But when it comes to FIVE times, then I know something missing. And there's something wrong with The United Way. I've been out of the workforce for a long time. And when I was in the workforce, my wonderful clam and friendly demeanor told any HR representative or manager not to ask me to donate to charity. It was very clear that I was a strict tax libertarian and really did not have pity for the poor as even once he was poor and managed to get out of without a penny of help from anyone. But with an e-mail from a fan, "Rich", I've heard about employees being forced or twisted arm from their bosses or HR managers to donate to The United Way. So I decided to do some research, and hokie smokes, it's a bloody epidemic. The most "authoritative" article (should) was this one here from the SF port. But a basic Bing research pulls up hundreds of stories, articles, discussion boards, etc. on how (in addition to a tax rate of 40%) they are forced to donate to the United. Because United Way is so widespread and no other charity is mentioned, I don't know. And while my intellectually honest mind says, "There's probably another charity like this,"And the statistical mind says: "No, there's something going on here. The unified way would not have been mentioned so frequently." So lieutenant, economists, agents in the field, sons and Cappy Cappites, how about to flet this here New-Found Media Muscle and do our best to dissuade people from donation to the united way? À Charity should be optional, not forced or forced. And since we are already forced and forced by the liberals through the government to donate to their pet charities, the least we can do is say that the HR bitch and the Douche manager to push it the next time they ask us to donate the unitary way.
